At the website you can find a request for counseling (online or face to face), a list of upcoming training events, answers to frequently asked questions, online training videos, the location and directions to our service centers, small business success stories, and more. With the website, you have access to the SBDC at any time from any place with Internet access.

The website is managed by the SBDC Research Network, a unit of information specialists that provides business research for our clients. As an SBDC client, this invaluable business research service is available to you at no cost.

SBDC advisors understand that some businesses require assistance with more than the usual business management issues. Your challenge may be legal or personnel-related, technology-based or regulatory in nature. We have alliances with agencies and organizations that can provide in-depth industry or technical assistance if you need more than our business advisors can provide. Our advisors make the necessary connections with their contacts at those organizations for you.

“ I simply couldn't have succeeded without the preparation and help of my SBDC business advisor. ”

The SBDC serves all New Yorkers who dream of small business ownership, but we particularly emphasize services for people with special needs. If you are a veteran, member of the Guard and Reserve or other individual serving in the armed forces; a member of an ethnic minority or new immigrant community; a disabled individual; a woman business owner; someone affected by changes in defense industry priorities; a small exporter; owner of a business in an economically distressed area of New York; or owner of a technology-based business, we have specially trained and dedicated advisors available to help knock down any obstacle in your path.

“ Thank you very much for making this invaluable service available. My counselor has been, and continues to be, extremely helpful. She has brought my dream within reach. ”
